[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE OREGONIAN.]

West Virginia Republican Convention.

WHEELING, West Va., July 28.—The Republican State Convention organized to-day by the election of W. Campbell permanent president. The committee on resolutions presented a majority and minority report. The former arraigns the Democrats in conformity with pledges for reform made years ago, and for general incapacity and fraudulent practices. It lauds the Republican party and commends its quickness to punish frauds in its own ranks and indorses the principles of the National Republican Convention. The minority report, which favors submitting the capital question, was signed by a large number and finally rejected and adopted with the majority report. The following State ticket was nominated: Governor, Gen Nathan Goff, by acclamation; superintendent public schools, F C Cragg; auditor, C M Shercots; ... Moses Frankensberger, of Kanawha county, attorney general, John A Hutchinson.

Foreign Goods at the Centennial.

PHILADELPHIA, July 28.—There has been some apprehension here regarding the action of Congress in deciding that articles on exhibition at the Centennial Exposition might be sold and removed from the ground at any time. It was felt it might, and ... would result in serious detriment to the exhibition. To-day, however, the customs authorities of the exhibition gave as an explanation that it only duplicates of exhibited articles that are ... to be taken away.

Hendricks at Saratoga.

SARATOGA, July 27.—The arrival of Hendricks at the Grand Hotel this morning created quite a stir among the Democratic politicians who are here in numbers. He was immediately taken in tow by Senator O'Brien and others and was conveyed to the race track to witness the sport. Hendricks came to meet Tilden, who has telegraphed he will arrive here early to-morrow. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, has also been telegraphed for by Henry Phillips, of Philadelphia, who appears to be acting as chairman for Hendricks and will probably arrive to-morrow; also there is to be a conference this afternoon, which will decide on letters of acceptance, which, it is said, will be ready for delivery. Phillips has been an avowed hard money man, and having great influence over Hendricks, with whom he served in the 35th Congress, it is presumed he will prevail upon him to tone the letter on the money question. Senator Bixby and a large number of anti-Tammany men are here waiting for Tilden and preparing for Hendricks.

The Silver Bill in Wall Street.

The possibility of the passage of the silver bill, and payment of United States bonds and duties in silver coin excited a great deal of interest in Wall street yesterday. One class of financiers believed that if the silver bill should pass gold would advance forty or fifty percent and government bonds would decline in proportion, while another and conservative class believed that both gold and bonds would fluctuate only a very small fraction. The latter class believe the bill would not become law, and consequently there was more apprehension than was necessary.

The engineer left his post a few minutes when a small hole was blown in the boiler. Several persons were slightly scalded. Escaping steam which enveloped the boat so that objects two feet away were invisible. The scene of confusion ensued, women fainted, children crying fire, and the passengers crowding aft. The steamer was at last towed to Coney Island, where the engineer narrowly escaped lynching for leaving his post.

License Committee Coming to Terms.

The committee of conference on the amendments to the West Point academy bill have arrived at an agreement, the House receding from the amendments involving $8,000 and the Senate receding from the amendments involving $1,000. The Committee remit to a board provided in the same bill the question of the pay of professors. In the meantime they will receive the pay provided by the present law.

There is a prospect of an early compromise on the Indian appropriation bill. If the Senate shall refuse to take up for consideration the House bill solely proposing the transfer of the Indian bureau from the Interior to the War Department the House will recede from that part of the Indian appropriation bill providing for such transfer. This obstacle removed, other questions will be of easy adjustment, but will require $1,000,000 to added to the appropriation.

Hamlin said there had been three conferences on this bill, and why should this bill, time after time, go to the conference committee, headed by two men who might be denominated the Titus Oates and Wm Bedloe of to-day. He did not see why the Senate should not adhere to its amendments and let this comity die the death of the outright ... and then let the House understand what the Senate would do. If the bill came back from another conference he gave notice he would make a motion that the Senate adhere to its amendments.

After a long debate a new conference was agreed to.

The river and harbor bill was then taken up and recommitted to the committee on appropriations with instructions to report the bill so that the total amount appropriated shall not exceed five millions.

THE SIOUX CAMPAIGN.

Merritt En Route to Join Crook—A Battle Expected before a Junction is Effected.

DRY FORK, SOUTH CHEYENNE, Via FORT FETTERMAN, July 27.

Gen Merritt, with eight companies of the Fifth Cavalry and sixty-four recruits for regiments in the field, arrived here this afternoon, thirty miles from Fort Fetterman, en route to join Gen Crook. Yesterday and to-day we made short marches as two companies of the Fifth and a number of fresh recruits, who will leave Fetterman to-morrow morning, must overtake us before the dangerous part of the journey is reached. At this very place last spring all of Gen. Crook's cattle were run off by Indians, and every precaution has been taken by Gen Merritt to prevent a surprise, although no trouble is anticipated until we reach Powder river. Somewhere between that point and headquarters an attack is confidently expected as the Indians are known to be massed in large numbers thereabouts. The soldiers of this command are in good condition, notwithstanding their hard work of late and seem anxious to get a chance at the red skins.

A courier from Gen Crook brings the news that the Indians are burning the grass all around the camp. Crook desires Gen. Merritt to press forward as rapidly as possible, as immediate action is necessary. The courier now leaving will carry orders to those in the rear to make forced marches so as to join to-morrow night. When we have reached Crook's camp he will be able to place in the field almost 1,700 men against probably 4,000 or 5,000 Indians. He ought to have twice as large a force at least for the Sioux are warriors in every sense of the word.

Crook Apprehends Heavy Fighting.

CHICAGO, July 28.—The Evening Telegraph's special says: It is believed at army headquarters that the forces of Crook and Gibbon are not over 80 miles apart and can readily be brought within supporting distance. Crook feels that he is going to have a hard time fighting, but intends to make it decisive. It is said there are at least 6,000 warriors in the field under Sitting Bull. It is feared that the Sioux may have received accessions from the Sioux in the British provinces, which might swell the hostile forces to 10,000. The Sioux, if driven to the wall by the troops, will go north and take refuge in the British provinces."

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 28.—Gen Ignatieff recently expressed the opinion that an armistice was inevitable within three or four weeks and would probably be brought about by the united action of the six powers. He thought the present difficulties would be arranged by partitioning Bosnia between Austria and Servia and giving Montenegro to Herzegovina.

BERLIN, July 28.—The defeat of the Montenegrins occasions discomfiture at the Russian court. Some Russian diplomatists assert it will be impossible for the Czar to repress the war spirit in Russia if the Turks invade Servia. This probably accounts for the hesitation of the Turks.

LONDON, July 28.—The Standard's correspondent at Osman Pasha's camp telegraphs that while the fight was going on between Servian battalions and Osman Pasha's forces, the main body of the Servians at Galtschar thinking that Osman Pasha had withdrawn all his men from camp crossed the Timok river and attacked him. Osman Pasha opened fire from his batteries, and the Servians hastily recrossed the river with loss.

A Vienna dispatch says: Prince Milan proceeds from Belgrade to the camp at Schubatz. His opponents report that he intends to enter Hungary. Officers of the National Guard in several Servian towns have been asked to surrender arms in their charge. It is believed this measure is caused by fear of a violent outbreak of the anti war party, though the authorities allege that the arms are required for volunteers.

Karageorge's proclamation, which was placarded in several Servian towns on Wednesday night, declares the deposition of Prince Milan is necessary because of his treachery. Karageorge ... his offers to save the country.

A Berlin special says the Greek embassy here states that Greece intends to maintain the strictest neutrality at present, but admits that events might arise which would require Greece to enter into action.

LONDON, July 28.—The ... special correspondent confirms reports of the repulse of ... Turks who attempted to cross the Timok at Wasnoguatz. The ... correspondent at Belgrade denies that the Servians are collapsing. There has been no engagement sufficiently great to affect the power of either of the combatants to prolong the contest.

The Czar will send one of his own physicians to attend the wounded at Belgrade. Many Odessa ladies have started for Servia to superintend the hospitals.

A Ragusa special says the Turks left four hundred on the field at the battle near Podgoritza Tuesday. Also that the Prince of Montenegro's campaign is regarded as a failure. Savage, W. S., Geo. Owens, W. A. S., R. J. Orum, W. F. S., Mrs. C. Birdseye, W. T., A. Orum, W. M., Dora Birdseye, W. D. M., J. F. Bailey, W. C., J. R. Bailey, W. I. G., W. Houston, W. O. The Independent says Capt. Lamson, of Forest Grove, has seven blockade runner flags in his possession. Among them is the flag pennant jack of the steamer Virginius, which is the same vessel whose crew were shot by the Spanish in Cuba. She was captured by the U. S. steamer Gettysburg under the command of Capt. Lamson on the North Carolina coast in 1864, and was then sailing under the name Lillian, and was the swiftest blockade runner sent out from England during the rebellion. Another of these flags was taken from the blockade runner Ida, another from the Venus, a blockade runner also.

The Corvallis Gazette says: "Last Tuesday, while Mr. J. F. Palmer and his wife were both temporarily absent from home, their little son, Cottie, aged 3 years, took a dueling pistol from a drawer, and while in the act of handling, discharged it, the ball entering the palm of his left hand, terribly lacerating the entire hand. In company with the young lady, who had charge of the house, he walked to a near neighbor's, Mrs. Gallelly, who, with great presence of mind, submerged the hand in a basin of cold water, and sent for Mr. Palmer, who had come to town. He soon returned with Dr. J. B. Lee, who dressed the wound and thinks he will be able to save the hand."

The Corvallis Gazette says on Friday of last week, while Mr. Wilson Bump, of King's valley, was some distance from the house reaping, and Mrs. B. and the children were out picking berries, some person in disguise, entered the house, overhauled the drawers, and took away some sugar and perhaps other articles. The hired hand, Wm. Newman, returned to the house upon an errand and seeing the fellow in the house gathered the ax, and met him at the back door. The burglar struck the young man upon the cheek, who in turn struck him a blow upon the shoulder with the ax, but the fellow succeeded in making his escape. Suspicion rests upon a certain hombre, but no arrest has been made.

It will be remembered by our readers, says the Independent, that a few weeks ago Wm. Hume, of Butte precinct, Washington county, was arrested for assault with a dangerous weapon, he having successively snapped a pistol at Dr. Mendenhall, and a shot gun at Mrs. Dr. Price and his wife. He was examined before Justice Carpenter, of that precinct, and was bound over in the sum of $2,000 to appear for trial at the next term of circuit court in this county. It appears that Hume had mortgaged his property in order to get security for his appearance at court, and that he had to turn over certain notes and his watch to his wife before she would sign the mortgage. On Monday last Hume was again arrested on complaint of his wife, who testified that he has threatened her life since the former action because she would not return him the watch and notes, and was examined before Justice Carpenter, who fixed his bonds at $... and Hume not being able to give bail was brought to this place on Monday by the ... Constable ... and shut up in the jail, where he now is. The above facts are as we get them.

The Madison Pilot (Dem.), just before the Democratic convention spoke of Tilden in this wise: "Besides being a hard soft shinplaster, anything to make dollars of in Governor Tilden, a ... railway shark with a double row of teeth all round. Wouldn't it be a cool operation to ask the nearly 80,000 reform voters of Wisconsin who oppose railway monopolies, to vote for Samuel J. Tilden? Some of them, from party punctilio, might do it, but the great mass would rebel not only against Tilden but against the leaders who would lead the masses into the great slaughter pen."

The fire was confined to the basement when it started. Loss unknown, but probably light.

Arrival of the Australian Rifle Team.

The Australian rifle team, which arrived on the City of San Francisco last night, will take part in the regular monthly match of the California Rifle Association to-morrow, by courtesy, and then they will be entertained at dinner at the Palace Hotel.

Nothing going on in the city with the exception of numerous meetings of political ward clubs.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The Races at Seattle.

SEATTLE, July 28.—The race to-day was made three times around the track—which is 240 yards less than a mile—and repeat, and was the hardest contested race ever run on the northwest coast. The horses were brought promptly on time; all appeared to be in good condition and got off well together, Bigham and Tom Merry running neck and neck, Bigham winning the heat by a length, Tom Merry, not having fully recovered from injuries received on the Portland track a few days since, came in very lame—so bad as to cause him to stand on three feet while being saddled for the next heat. Time, 4:54.

On the second heat the horses run well together the entire distance, Tom Merry winning the heat by half a neck, his foot showing increasing signs of weakness. Time, 5 min.

On the third heat the horses got a good start, Tom Merry leading two and a half times around the track, when he suddenly fell behind giving Bigham the heat by three lengths. Time, 5:05.

A large amount of money changed hands. The three days races have given universal satisfaction.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Lieutenant Governor Sworn In.

VICTORIA, July 28.—Hon R N Richards, lately appointed lieutenant governor of this province, was to-day sworn in. His commission was only received here last evening.

Governor General of Canada.

By private telegrams from Ottawa to-day it is announced that Earl Dufferin, Governor General of the Dominion, will probably leave San Francisco on the 10th of August, and is expected to reach here about the 13th or 14th.

THE TERRITORIES.

The Unitarian church at Olympia will cost about $2,500 when completed.

The Territorial Teachers' Institute met at Olympia on the 26th inst. J. P. Judson was chosen President, and J. E. Clark, Secretary. There was a fair attendance and the session promised to be interesting and profitable.

Olympia is improving and beautifying liberally this year. Roads, sidewalks, fences and buildings have been put in good order, and the Olympian claims that no town on the coast presents a more attractive appearance to an artistic eye.

The Olympia Echo of the 27th says: "Water was scarce in this city on Thursday—very scarce. The hydrants were dry. One man went over into Swantown in order to wash his face. Others failed to follow his example. It is now an undecided question as to whether that single man could not obtain water in Olympia proper, or whether the rest of humanity in the first ward washed their faces at all on the morning noted for such a scarcity of water."

On Monday evening last, while Chas. Reed, telegraph operator at Tenino, was walking out he discovered a huge animal within 75 yards of the station house. He threw a stick at it and discovered that it was a cougar. Reed ran to the station house and procured a musket which he loaded with about sixteen buckshot. When he returned to where the cougar was standing on a log, he was afraid to shoot the gun off for fear that it was dangerous to be behind it. Chas. Gallick, who had accompanied Mr. Reed, shot the gun, hitting the cougar in the hips. Fresh ammunition was brought from the station house and the cougar exterminated, having received a shot in the head. The animal was over six feet in length. It was attracted within the city limits by the fresh carcass of a cow, and was loathe to leave while hungry.

The Salt Lake Tribune says: "Lee is the Mormon elder who killed Mr. Wilcox at ... on in Cache Valley, ... verdict of murder in the second degree recently ... by the court of the third judicial district ... of Utah. ... Wilcox was a Gentile and his offense against the Mormon priesthood consisted ... [illegible] ... heavenly kingdom's sacred soil, situated on Weston creek, a few miles above the town. During the time Evans has been confined in prison he has on several occasions attempted to commit suicide and when he came to be tried he showed such strong signs of insanity that the jury saw fit to convict him only of murder in the second degree. It is anticipated he will soon make a confession and reveal the whole truth connected with the assassination of Wilcox placing the crime on the shoulders of the Mormon priesthood of Cache Valley, where it rightfully belongs."

LETTER FROM SAN FRANCISCO

COSSIP OF THE GOLDEN CITY

SAN FRANCISCO, July 23, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

Well, here we are in the midst of a hot and lively summer. Nearly everybody wears straw hats, and by next year linen coats and vests will be a mode here as much as in Portland. I can remember when no allowance was made in the way of clothing here during the summer months, but men dressed warmer, if anything, than they did in winter. The city is at present resolved into a grand

CAN'T GET AWAY CLUB.

All the fashionable families being at the watering places. In former years, nobody thought of going anywhere but White Sulphur Springs, and very few went there even. But the increase of railroads and the corresponding facilities of travel have caused numerous watering places to spring up. Santa Cruz is the Long Branch of the Pacific, though by no means as beautiful a beach as Santa Monica. Aptos is the newest seaside resort where most of our Muldoons do congregate; it lies some distance the other side of Santa Cruz. Its convenience makes a very nice place of it, but it cannot compare with Clatsop. What a nice thing it is to be near a big city to be sure. Suppose the "Gorge" was as close to San Francisco as it is to Victoria, there would be five thousand people there every week day and twenty thousand on Sundays. Talk about mineral springs I can show you a chalybeate of iron spring near Jacksonville, that beats any spring in this State for restoring debilitated people. It is very much like the "Pavilion" at Saratoga, and unequaled by anything on the coast. Yet its remote location will always be against it till a railroad is built all the way through from this city to Portland.

THE THEATERS

Are comparatively dull in consequence of the absentee-ism above alluded to, but the French troupe headed by the voluptuous Aimee, have been drawing good houses at Wade's. In the opera of the "Pretty Perfumer" this saucy and sensuous songstress interpolates the song and dance "Prettee as a Peckture," as she pronounces it, and made a tremendous hit in it. The "Gods" went wild over it, and even the foreign population had to laugh at the cleverness of the absurd innovation. It is singular that this highly virtuous city, which was so fearfully shocked over Matt. Morgan's tableau vivants, can find no immodesty in Aimee's undressing scene with Cocardiere, in which he gives her the key of his chamber, because she looks tired, poor child. At Baldwin's the comedy of "Brass," with Geo. F. Rowe as "Wanton Stray," has drawn good houses for a week. The character is a mixture of Lord Dundreary and "Tom Dexter," in the "Overland Route," but Rowe makes a great part of it in the introduction of certain mannerisms peculiar to New York dandies. At the California, they have been rushing benefits for whoever would pay for the house, the one this evening being that of Edward J. Buckley, formerly a race rider in Oregon, but now a popular light comedian. The California has run down somewhat of late, and does not seek to maintain its prestige of yore. The leading lady is Miss Ettie Wilton, very cold and weak, when we remember Bella Pateman and Charlotte Thompson; as for the soubrette, Alice Harrison, she is a sorry successor to sparkling little Jennie Lee. In a variety show she would doubtless be a big card, but she is now badly out of her place. Maguire is running a variety show of minstrels, &c., but the card of the show is a young fellow named Billy Scanlan, who seems to have inherited the comic talent of Tyrone Power, with a far-down brogue of his own. He does an act with Cronin, also very good, entitled "A Tenement House," which beats anything I have seen for fun.

AN APPALLING TRAGEDY

Took place at the Brooklyn Hotel, this week, being the death of a school teacher named Lydia Barnum, from the effects of medicine administered to procure abortion. The details are so revolting that I must be excused from repeating them here. But little doubt can be had that her seducer was the man Ivory, whose name, written on an envelope beside the dead girl's body, was the only clue to her identity (for she was registered under an assumed name), dying as she did among strangers. The doctor (so-called) who attended her, cannot be proven to have prescribed for her, so he will probably escape. The hellish trade he plies is a common avocation here, and you can see the signs of these "private physicians" on every corner. I well remember how the stern Spartan justice of your State punished Dr. Glass, and how the execrations of society excommunicated a prominent politician from your midst for advertising medicines of this class, sometime before. Oregon has nothing to regret in those cases, for they speak well for the humanity of her people. If there is one crime more hellish than another, it is the slaughter of unborn innocence.

THE "GEO. W. ELDER"

This splendid steamer arrived here on Thursday last, and is now undergoing a thorough overhauling at the foot of Folsom street. She was 70 days on the passage, but only had steam on her when she encountered head winds. She is rigged like a fore-and-aft schooner, and is a very neat model. She looks something like the City of Panama, but is in every respect a finer vessel. The "Gray Chief" was in command of her, and will bring her to Portland about the 1st of September, and I am confident that all his friends will turn out to give Capt. Connor a warm reception. There was a rumor current here that the steamships Clyde and South Carolina would be put on as an opposition line to Portland, but I cannot trace it to any definite source. These steamers belong to the Panama Railroad Co. and are about the size of the Ajax. I do not see where there is business to warrant an opposition line, unless there should be a sudden

BOOM FOR OREGON

Gotten up by the display of her products at the Centennial. People of my acquaintance who have returned from the national Barnumism, residents of this State and Nevada, say that Oregon has out maneuvered the other Pacific States entirely in her exhibit and her inducements to immigrants. They tell me that your commissioners were always on hand to give information and never got tired of the many conundrums with which they were afflicted. At the California department however things were left to work out their own salvation, consequently it is not difficult to see how Oregon got the best of the Golden State. The worst drawback I can see to the growth of Oregon is the usury law now in force there. Money is like every other auxiliary of commerce, a thing to be regulated by the inexorable law of supply and demand. If men in Oregon are prohibited by law from collecting 12 per cent. interest, and men in California will pay for money whatever it is worth, it stands to reason that Oregon money will come here for investment. Capital is the savings of labor, and so long as the fruits of your industries can be better employed here than at home just so long will they gravitate hither. As your legislature meets shortly, you will have the opportunity of impressing this on the minds of some of your black mail Solons, who cannot see why laws that were good for 1860 are not good now. They cannot realize that the State is growing while they are standing still. Again

OREGON CAPITALISTS

Are doing nothing for the State. A few days ago I met a Maine ship builder, who told me that his visit to the Pacific coast was mainly caused by reading an article written by me and published in a monthly journal of your city. He is certain to locate either at Puget Sound or Columbia river within a year to build vessels for the carriage of grain to Europe. Yet while I, an impecunious Bohemian, not owning a dollar's worth of property in your State, am doing all I can to attract the attention of ship-builders to your splendid forests, your leading capitalists go to Maine to get a ship built for the Portland and San Francisco trade. If they were like Asa Simpson (to whose enterprise we are indebted for the Western Shore) men who made their money outside of Oregon, I would regard the case in a different light. But as they are indebted to Oregon for every dollar they possess, they might at least have done differently. The worst I wish them is that the Tam O'Shanter may start a day behind their ship and get in a day ahead of her as long as she floats. One thing is certain, Oregon will never rise to her true status in the commercial world until her merchants own the controlling portion of the fleet which bears away her grain and spend the freight money in Portland instead of Liverpool.

IRON SHIPS

Are as popular to-day as they ever will be, and I am greatly mistaken if they are not on the decline. The percentage of iron ships that disappear and are never heard from is absolutely frightful, and I predict a return to wooden ships before long, after which the forests of Oregon will become valuable. The Western Shore has not yet been running two years, but by the time she gets back here from England she will have paid for herself, and her cost was less than $80,000. Mr. Bourck, publisher of the Centennial Spirit of the Times, told me yesterday that the only fault he had to find with his paper was that it contained nothing about Pacific coast ship-building in general and the Western Shore in particular. That iron may do better than wood for steamships may be true, but the condition of the Oduma and City of Tokio do not indicate it. The latter ship is eighteen months old and has now to be repaired at a cost of only two hundred thousand dollars.

POLITICAL MATTERS

Are beginning to boil. The Republicans are organizing in every direction and have formed clubs, not only in the city but in most of the interior towns also. In this respect they are far ahead of the Democrats, who have several internecine fights in their ranks. The battle against Piper in this city won't be enough to beat him for renomination but the "toughs" swear they will knife him at the polls. In the third district there is something of a fight against Luttrell, but I predict his renomination as well as his re-election. The governor's appointments, too, have not particularly strengthened the party, if I am correctly informed. The Chinese question is freely handled by the stump orators of both parties, and it is said that Frank Pixley will purchase the Post and make the long-tail question the main policy of his paper. KILDONAN.

FARMING ITEMS.

A Yamhill county farmer threshed his oats the present week.

The grape crop in Southern Oregon promises to be very abundant this year.

T. Johnson has sold his place, originally a part of the Lousignot place, near Wapato lake, containing 200 acres, for $6,000, $2,000 being paid cash down.

Last week Jacob Hoover sold the south half of his donation land claim near Forest Grove, consisting of 318 acres, to J. C. Weathered, late from California, for $7,000.

Farmers say the wheat crop of Utah will average about twenty-five bushels to the acre. The grain is very plump and solid, and will make superior flour.

The Times says: Martin & Castleton, who have a band of their fine blooded sheep a few miles from Jacksonville, lost about 80 of them last week by the ravages of sheep-killing dogs. Among those killed was one fine ram valued at $200.

The Albany Cultivator says: "Bro. C. P. Burkhart has left at our office a bundle of red clover only two years from the seed, which measured six feet in length. We are surprised when people say clover will not succeed in Oregon. We are ready to vote impossibilities in the growth of anything, out of our valley.

The Gazette says: Mrs. J. W. Cook, of Corvallis, has laid upon our table some very fine specimens of wheat and barley, from the farm of Mr. John Powell, near Philomath, which would be hard to beat. We were also shown, by Mr. Thomas Graham, some extra fine specimens of wheat from the farm of his brother, Richard Graham, on the island above Corvallis. We have the most cheering reports of crop prospects in various sections of Benton county. The grain yield will be far better than was expected by the most sanguine six weeks since.

The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 29 1876

THE DEMOCRATIC OPPOSITION TO CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

The Standard, of this city, which claims to be the metropolitan organ of the Democracy of Oregon, publishes with apparent approbation an attack of the New York Sun on Governor Hayes on account of his position on the Civil Service question. The ground of attack is that Hayes declares that the only qualifications for office are honesty, "capacity and fidelity," and that there can be no other claim for appointment to office. The Sun probably advised that Mr. Tilden deems it impolitic to take the same ground in the face of his hungry Democratic supporters, says the rule laid down by Hayes would create an aristocracy of office-holders, and the "insolence of office would grow until it would become insupportable among a few." The popular demand for reform in the system of Civil Service appointments can not safely be ignored, however, and hence the Sun taxes its ingenuity to invent some way for the party to seem to be for reform without being so in fact, and thus to wheedle the people into supporting Tilden and at the same time leave him free to reward the party hacks with the spoils of victory in case he is elected. So the Sun straddles the question, with a declaration that the reform that is needed is simply that no men shall be appointed except such as are capable and honest. This leaves the whole system of rewarding partisan services with official position just where it is now. Party services, says the Sun in substance, constitute a valid claim upon the successful candidate for official appointment, but such rewards must only be given to persons who are competent and faithful. That is just the doctrine whose application has produced the reign of corruption and incapacity against which the people are protesting and which they have resolved to overthrow. Among all the shameful appointments that have been made under the spoils system there has never been one it may be safely asserted, which the appointing power would have attempted to defend at the time it was made, on the ground that the appointee was capable and honest. Is any one stupid enough to suppose the President would admit that he made appointments of persons to office whom he did not suppose to possess just the qualifications demanded by the Sun—capacity and honesty? Of course not. And still there have been scores and hundreds and thousands of persons appointed, who were notoriously incapable and grossly dishonest. They were recommended by politicians in Senate or House, whom they had served, as honest and capable, and were appointed not because of these qualifications which could be found as well in other parties, but because they had served the party and party service was deemed to constitute a valid claim to an appointment. The breaking down of this system with its inevitable tendency to corruption in the public service, is just the the reform the people want, just the reform the country needs, just the reform Mr. Hayes proposes, and just the reform the Democratic politicians deprecate and dread. The system itself is an invention of Democratic politicians, transferred into the Republican party from the Democratic camp, and would be kept up, with all its consequent corruptions and frauds if the Democrats should carry the country in November.

NOTHING BUT POLITICS.

There is indeed but little else floating in the current of events. The range of partyism is wide, and it takes in, swallows up, levels down and confines everything but itself. The consequences cannot be presented so plainly as to assure any perception of their character; but one who stands untrammeled by the bands of partisanship may observe that the war of opinion among the people of the Republic in their civil capacity is, or will be, no less bitter and relentless than the war which once opened wide the doors of slaughter and the gates of blood. In observing this condition of party feeling, we cannot but fear and hope—fear that party politics have not yet reach their summit height in producing hatred, and hope that, coursing through the universal commotion, there is a calming spirit of such increasing power as will change the ills of party strife to national good.

If there is nothing but politics, what else is there to speak of? Should we all answer, "Nothing," and then all plunge recklessly into the tide of gall—each of us to add bitterness to its green and noisome depths? Or should we not esteem our liberties more highly? Essentially all the privileges of American citizenship are antagonistic to the madness of faction and the rise and rule of selfish leadership. In free opinion and free expression there is no authority for an enlightened and progressive people to yield any further to the claims of party organization than is necessary to promote those citizens whose lives have been such as to show that they would not be partisan and selfish except for the purpose of enhancing the public welfare.

Philosophizing on what should or might have been, or supinely deploring what is, will not fit the times so well as unfaltering faith in the future of the American Republic and appropriate action to bring unity and harmony out of the commotions by which the country is stirred throughout its length and breadth. Agitation that has no higher object than party ascendancy is pernicious agitation from which if any good arises it comes as an accidental, or at least, an incidental result. Political strife founded in anything less unselfish than a conviction that it is promotive of the public good is a strife that bodes no good to the country. It may be well enough we hear of nothing but politics, when a President is to be chosen, for the interests involved are mighty enough, the stake vast enough to challenge the attention of every citizen; but if there is to be nothing in the politics of the hour but party, party, party, the contest could be settled with much less expense of time and money, and much less demoralization of public sentiment by tossing a copper for the result.

ONE OF G. W. LAWSON'S SPASMS.

G. W. Lawson, in a letter to the Salem Statesman, expresses the opinion that we must be in the interest of the transportation monopoly because we said the other day, when inviting discussion on the situation, that we did not yet see the way out of the difficulty clearly enough to offer any plan of action. If that is a sufficient ground upon which to base the conclusion reached by Mr. Lawson, he himself must have had his hands lined to the finger ends by the monopolists, for he rants through a column and a half without suggesting a remedy. The farmers themselves are also in the same interest, if we are to accept Lawson's statement and his mode of reasoning, for he says they are walking up and down with brows knit and countenances heavy with trouble on account of their inability to perceive the way by which they are to release themselves from the grasp of the carriers. But we are hardly ready to accept Mr. Lawson's logic. It can not be that all who regard the problem of opening the gate at the Falls as a difficult one, are in the interest of the monopoly. We certainly are not, and we do not believe the farmers, whose bewilderment Mr. Lawson so graphically depicts, are. Mr. Lawson judges others by himself. That is usually a pretty good way to reach conclusions, because human nature is pretty much alike wherever you find it, provided it is clothed and in its right mind. But we protest, as well on behalf of the bewildered farmers as for our bewildered selves, against a method of reason which generalizes the processes of other people's minds from observation of the processes of Mr. Lawson's mind. There is another view of this matter, however, which may be more just, as it is certainly more charitable. Possibly he is not in the interest of the monopoly at all, and finding that other people seem to be puzzled over the transportation problem just as he is, and knowing how different his modes of reasoning ordinarily are from those of others he concludes they are in the employ of the monopolists simply because he is not. At any rate, on this hypothesis we accept the apology of Mr. Lawson in advance.

The organs of the party of eternal principles are exercised because Richard Williams made a speech in Yamhill county without sending a special messenger to Washington to invite Lafayette Lane to be present on the occasion. We were not aware that Mr. Williams had lost his right to speak to the people of Oregon by his nomination to Congress. Mr. Lane will have ample opportunity before the November election to be present when Mr. Williams addresses the people; and then, two years hence, if the Democracy should again nominate him, he will have a chance to get even by making a speech in Yamhill county without sending to Washington for Mr. Williams.

The Statesman says the State of Oregon is in great need of a Republican Senator at Washington. Right for once. But if the legislature fail to elect a Republican Senator, the people will elect Richard Williams to the House of Representatives, which will give us one Republican in Congress. We ought to have more, but that is a good deal.

Card to the Public.

MR. C. C. MORSE,

OF PALACE OF ART NOTORIETY, IS LABORING very industriously to impress upon the minds of the community that the

is a bogus Instrument stating to every one with whom he comes in contact that Mr. Weber is secretary of the Bogus Piano Co., and that the WEBER PIANO is manufactured by the said Company.

The malicious and supremely ridiculous fabrication may be accounted for by the fact that Mr. Morse's utter want of manliness and business integrity were the prime causes of Sherman & Hyde's Music Store being removed to No. 123 First street.

The above FALSEHOODS regarding the

are so transparent that no refutation further than to state the motives prompting their circulation is necessary.

It was followed by Captain McD[illegible] of the ship City of Sparta, and the crew of the deceased. Arriving at the cemetery, he delivered an impressive discourse on the life and death of the deceased. The body was interred in the lot belonging to the St. Andrew's Society. SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 29, 1876.

NONE TO CARESS

There had been a summer shower; roof window garden were washed to dazzling polish, and the wonderful, a part ambient de rose of the moment poured over all an air of enchantment. The stranger young woman in deep mourning whom the stalwart proprietor of the awkward vehicle lifted down like a feather accepted her deposited destination with a smile.

"How lovely!" were the first words that escaped her lips, and they were appropriated as a fitting compliment by a rustic Hadrian who seized the little gloved hand vigorously in his horny palm, and hoped he saw Miss Thatcher quite well.

"Supper's bin ready this half hour," was the laconic and not amiable salutation of Mr. Seaman's spouse, who received Louisa in the porch.

"An the boys is gone fishin', you see," said the host. "When Solon's to larn from ram mar school, Ezra's sure to jine him, an' take a day off."

After tea, served in a narrow, whitewashed anteroom to the stiff funereal parlor, where Miss Thatcher was bid "take off" her things, the young lady begged to be shown to her own room and was led up stairs to a low windowed bedroom carpeted with braided rags, and furnished with reddened pine and calico counterpanes. The luggage had been pushed in with a mental ejaculation: "What on earth can a district school ma'am want with two big trunks?" and the audible information, "I've filled your pitcher. Here's a candle. The git up bell 'll ring at six."

With as slight preparation as might be, the overwearied girl, homesick to her heart's core—crept into bed.

She awoke with a start. The room was quite dark, a cool, damp, mountain wind rushed through the open windows. She lighted a match and glanced at her watch. Only 9 o'clock, and the world still wide awake. A burst of hilarious laughter arose from the kitchen below, where the returned fishermen were scaling their fish. From the house beyond the orchard came the tinkling of a piano, and a thin, sharp, female voice practised gingerly a song just then come into vogue.

"No one to love, none to caress,
Traveling alone through life's wilderness."

"My serenade," thought Louisa as she tried in vain to recompose herself to sleep. "Could any words express me better? An orphan, without brother or sister, penniless, nearly friendless, the one being that I loved and adored gone from me forever. 'No one to love, none to caress.' Could anything be truer of me than that?"

The village school children were enchanted with their new teacher. She was gentle and firm, interesting and companionable. There was not a sunny day all summer when some of them did not come after school to take her with them to Red Cedar Pond, the holiday rendezvous of the country round.

If the afternoon proved rainy, and this juvenile escort failed, Miss Thatcher, wrapping herself in water proof, and taking a book with her, would go down the orchard's steep bank to the old mill. She "made friends" with Tim, the miller's boy, and Bill Bowles, the miller, and "the old deacon," the prehistoric proprietor of the premises, who had not failed a day these fifty years to look in; rain or shine, to see "if things was to rights."

She found a love of a corner where, through the cracks under the great beams, she could see the water wildly rushing, and where she could hear, in its grand excitement, the grind and whirl, the boom and splash, of the mad flood whose sound up on the hill yonder assumed such a drowsy monotone.

"You be so fond of readin', Miss," said Tim, the miller's boy, "mebbe you'd take a shine to a curus book we've got 'ere. There was a time when all the visitors to Red Cedar Pond cum down to take a look at it; but it's grown rusty like. A hand-writ book, Miss—manuscrip sum folks calls it. It b'longs, you might say, to Bowles' Mill, for it was left with 'the old deacon,' to be kept till called fur, and was writ by the curusest specimin of a human cretur; but he died afore my time. I'm a stranger in these parts. I was reared twelve miles back."

"And no one has called for the book?"

"Not yit," said Tim, mysteriously—"not yit. Folks is too sup'stitious. There be sum who say it never will be called fur till the old d... lies aside o' the cretur who writ it. He died sudden, an' was buri'd up in the deacon's buri'l lot. An' sum say he wasn't buri'd, but is gone a sea v'yage, an' 'll come back; an' sum say he's been seed bodily round Bowles's mill moonlight nights. But you needn't be scared, miss. The book is nat'ral harmless. An' if you say so, I'll git it fur you this minit, an' when you're through readin' on't I'll put it back."

Up to the rafters he climbed nimbly by certain foot-holds not very visible, and brought down, with a flying leap that startled Miss Thatcher to her feet in nervous apprehension for his safety, a dusty volume which he gallantly wiped upon his coat sleeve and offered.

An autobiography, not so very old, for its closing date was 1847. Four hundred pages of yellow letter paper stitched together by the dozen sheets, and finally bound in a wrap of black leather. Written in a fine, pointed hand; difficult to read at first, but once mastered in its idiosyncracies, legible at ease; and having this peculiarity: on almost every page, mixed in with the text, were maps carefully drawn and dotted, inclosed in neatly ruled parallelograms, but without any figures or marginal references to show connection with the writing.

"I am one of two brothers," the narrative commenced, "in all points as unlike, from the moment of birth, as Jacob and Esau."

Then followed, interspersed with the incomprehensible maps, a brief history of an unhappy childhood, unloved as childhood could be, an adolescence utterly unblessed and dismal; and after a page of atheistical tirade against the inequality of fortune and the bitter tyranny of fate, the personal history developed into a descriptive diary of travels and business connections in South America, whither the writer had immigrated in his twenty-sixth year.

So far, and a litt'e farther, the manuscript bore marks of having been read; pages were dog-eared, and there was an occasional thumb print. But the style was so dull and monotonous, and the detail so lacking in adventure, that not one of "the visitors at Red Cedar Pond" had been inspired with sufficient curiosity to read the volume to its close.

Not one—excepting Miss Thatcher. She read every page carefully, even with avidity.

One Saturday morning—a beautiful sunny morning, for rainy days could no longer be waited for, the interest of the diary had become so absorbing—Miss Thatcher was early in her favorite place at the old mill, when Tim with a surprisingly long face, accosted her in a startled whisper:

"The manuscrip's bin called fur."

Miss Thatcher turned quite pale. "Is it gone?" she asked, faintly.

"No, miss, not gone," said Tim, radiantly, well satisfied with "the start" he had given her, "not tuk away when you was a-readin' on't. Catch me! Says I: Sir, you must bring a written order.' So he went up the hill to the old deacon's—that was yisterday. He'll be here fur certain to-day. But you've got the manuscrip, miss, to look at once agin, anyhow. Catch me a givin on't up till I had ter."

"Tim, you ar very good, kind fellow," said Miss Thatcher.

She took the manuscript, and it was then that, before she had read a word, she wrote in fine pencil mark upon the margin of one of the sallow pages—a page she had turned over leaf after leaf especially to find:

"No one to love, none to caress."

Hardly had she written this when the sound of a crutch was heard on the mill bridge, and voices, and in another moment the sunny doorway of the mill was darkened by two figures.

There was no escape for Louisa. She arose from her love of a corner, with the manuscript in her hands.

"I am sure you have come for this," she said to the old deacon. Then she glanced at his companion.

He could certainly bear no relation to "the curusest specimin of a human cretur" described by Tim as the author of the diary. She caught the impression, in her rapid glance, of a scholarly looking young man, with a pale forehead and a dark moustache, who wore eyeglasses.

"I believe I am the owner of the record left here so many years ago," the young man explained. "But I have no reason to carry it away at this moment. I shall be in the village over the Sabbath, perhaps through the week. If you have not finished reading it, I shall leave the book with you gladly."

"Oh no," said Miss Thatcher, quickly—too quickly she afterward thought, but embarrassment, or perhaps fate, urged her to decline the stranger's politeness.

She was gone ... she went an unaccountable impulse caused her to turn back, and say: "If you are kindred to the man who wrote the book, 'twill make you very sad ... perhaps; I hope you will feel a little ... for him."

At church on Sunday the ... of Bowles's Mill manuscript appeared in a ... upon his pew, and Louisa Thatcher felt, even when he was not looking at her, that his thoughts were studying her through and through.

On Monday morning as she trudged along the high road to the schoolhouse she saw him, and he evidently expected a ... but intent upon the necessity of absolute ... of a district school ma'am, she ... him none.

She blushed, though ... the young man ... perfectly ... That evening he ... in Mr. Seaman's ... with one of the village dignitaries, but the desire of his eyes was upstairs correcting compositions, and he did not gain a glimpse of her.

At noon the next day the mother of fifteen haired Nettie, pet of the baby class, came with Nettie's luncheon, accompanied by the indefatigable young man, who was then formally presented to Miss Thatcher.

From that time they met daily on the way to school and the way from school, walking slowly along the high road and the pretty wood path that close by it, and giving each other gradually, with all the trustful facility of youth and irresistible attraction, the confidential histories of their young lifetimes. At evening he came to see her.

And, then, what happened? All at once the dismal interior of the old house where Louisa boarded became as rosily transfigured as its exterior had been by the glory of the western heavens the hour of Miss Thatcher's arrival. In a more magical couleur de rose, the funeral parlor blushed into a boudoir; the low windowed bed room blossomed into beauty, not only with all the buds and branches brought into it as mementoes of darling walks and drives, but with the subtle efflorescent unfolding of love dreams.

One evening the young couple were sitting in Mr. Seaman's parlor by the dim lamp, dignified by the mercenary genius of Mrs. Seaman into "an extra," looking together over the mill manuscript.

"I find it so dull," said Leonard Mansfield. "Were it not for one consideration and one conviction, I should never be able to finish. The consideration is for your sake, because you like it, Louisa; the conviction was the foundation of my coming to claim the record. When my uncle's will was read seven years ago one clause struck my imagination.

"'If any of my heirs feel sufficiently interested in me to inquire into my personal history, they will find my diary in the old mill, where it was written, at Red Cedar Pond, twelve miles from U——, J—— county, Connecticut. Personal application to be made to Deacon Treat or Squire Wells.' The heirs noted this direction with indifference.

"My share of the legacies took me through college—as my father, one of the dearest and noblest of men, but never fortunate in money making, could not afford—and furnished me with a small capital to commence law practice. I had more than one compunctious thought about my benefactor. It seemed to me a shame to accept such benefits from a man in whom I had not even sufficient interest to acquaint myself with his personal history. This year, when I became for the first time encouragingly established in my profession, I determined to commence my vacation by looking up the neglected diary. I confess I do not find myself inspired by its revelation. What did you find dear Louisa to kindle you into the request that has haunted me, 'I hope you will love him a little?'"

"I found words in it," said Miss Thatcher, sighing so sorrowfully as she had not done since she had entered her new world of love and loving.

"Worlds of what, my dearest?" asked the light-hearted young lawyer. He was clasping her hand in one of his as he spoke, and with the other he turned absently the leaves of the time stained book that lay on the table. A little bit of handwriting that he knew struck his vision; it was the line on the margin.

"No one to love, none to caress."

Miss Thatcher saw it too. "Yes, I know," she said softly. "I wrote it there. I could not help it. 'Twas the tribute of my sympathy."

He turned to her very earnestly. Something in the tremulous sensitiveness of her face smote his heart painfully. Tears started to his eyes. He folded his strong arm around her with a sense of infinite tenderness.

"Let me tell you," she said, disengaging herself from his embraces, "what a strange thing I found or thought I found, in that diary. First of all, you know, I was drawn singularly into rapport with the writer by my own sad sad loneliness. I felt the depth of meaning in his complaint. 'Yes,' she said, trembling, "I must confess, and I do repeat, even in his complaint against Heaven. Alone in the world. Sometimes that happens."

And here let it be explained to the reader that by an accident in the cradle the writer of the diary had been made physically repellant, and his sensitive soul exaggerated his misfortune into a barrier between himself and the loving sympathies of all mankind. As for womankind he knew not—for his mother died at his birth—even its maternal tenderness.

"Leonard dear," Miss Thatcher went on, "you will think me, perhaps, the most superstitious being; but I think—and the idea has gathered some reasonable pleas—I can not help thinking that this book is framed as a mode of bequest. I believe the writer, your father's brother, stung with the bitter thought that his hard earned fortune would be spent by those who never knew or cared for him, devised a method by which a part at least should be the reward of affectionate gratitude."

She explained to him then her theory of the maps, and her instinctive construction of the particular map which she had studied at the very last reading in the old mill.

Leonard Mansfield's cheek flushed as he listened. At the close he said "Your reasoning is sufficiently plausible to deserve to be tested, and so it shall be. But first promise me one thing; promise me that if this miracle of intuition proves true, you will be my wife to-morrow. My darling, you shall not say 'No.'" He prevented her, indeed, in a loverlike way from saying anything. And silence is "yes" to love.

The last day of August the whole village of Red Cedar Pond was thrown into a ferment of excited curiosity.

The excitement began in one of the twin houses on the "Meeting-house Hill" at five o'clock in the morning. Miss Tabitha Batts stood in her night dress peeping through the blinds of a dormer window. She never could tell, as she declared afterward, what made her peep.

She saw the back door of "Dick Seaman's" open, and Louisa Thatcher look mysteriously out. Then she saw Tim, the miller's boy, creep stealthily around the porch with a pickaxe and a spade, which he gave to Miss Thatcher, who disappeared with them into the house. Then Tim, stealing back again as the lilac bushes, and cautiously surveying all approaches, put his hand over his mouth and gave a low whistle. Immediately from the horse shed by the church a man came very quickly and nodding to Tim as he passed hastened to the high road. Miss Tabitha was sure, although his cap was drawn over his face, that this man was the young stranger to the village who had been so infatuated with Miss Thatcher.

Then Miss Thatcher came to the door again and beckoned to Tim, and whispered, and he went around by way of the church, down the plum orchard, to the mill.

A pickaxe and a spade! Miss Tabitha had cold shivers; she could think of nothing but a grave. When, two hours afterward, the coast being clear, she sped across the garden ... her fancy lost none of its horrors ... northeast corner was a space of ... turned mould.

Miss Tabitha went home, put on her sun bonnet and was down to the ... in no time.

The next excitement was at the somb[r]e ... dwelling of old Squire Wells. Mr. Mansfield had been closeted with him an hour. And when the squire reappeared he nearly upset his ancient wife in the hallway in haste to get his hat and coat, and choked till he was scar... let screaming into her wrong ear that he was going to C—— on "bizniss!" Off he went at such a rovel pace that the poor dame's feeble faculties aroused themselves to concentrate upon one fatal remembrance. "When an old horse that has allers walked takes to runnin' away, there's no end o' damage."

Excitement third was a sealed letter dropped by Mr. Seaman's Ezra into the postoffice at 10 o'clock the hour of general delivery, directed to the trustees of the district school, which body, being in quorum on the spot, opened at once the resignation of Miss Thatcher in favor of the highly recommended candidate for the Winter term to whom they had kindly given her the preference.

Excitement fourth attacked flaxen haired Nettie's mother, a pleasant little widow to whom Tim, who had rode to C—— and back again at breakneck speed, brought a note from the Congregational minister ... saying he would soon ... that evening, if agreeable, as he was coming to Red Cedar Pond, in virtue of his office, to solemnize a ceremony ... as pleasantly, if not so ... the old widow's heart as ... the ... two, three, four ...

... of all, and the grand excitement of the ... was the ... at the ... the evening ... the meeting house bell. Who ... every one asked as the first few slow strokes were counted, but once fairly set going, the old bell ... thirty, eighty, a hundred, still on, joyously jubilant ... it is not for the dead, but for the living ... for a wedding!

Such a scene opening as there was up the Mill bridge road! There was no lack of witnesses to the simple ... service and of the coming down the ... on the arm of her proud young husband of ... Cedar ... with ... laid aside for purest white and ... on her bosom.

Not married in haste to repent at leisure were the two loving people who took the evening train at U—— for a far commercial city, preceded by their good fortune in the shape of a strong box filled with Spanish doubloons and English bank notes ingeniously bequeathed by an eccentric misanthrope, and discovered in its hiding place by a woman's wit, kindled by a woman's sympathy.

In one of the happiest of homes set apart upon a low, embroidery-draped pedestal that looks at first glance like a prie dieu, lies yellow with age the long neglected diary.

Not in vain had the once homeless orphan suffered. Not in vain at one dark moment of her life she accepted as hers the song that can never more belong to her—

"No one to love, none to caress."

FRIDAY EVENING, July 28, 1876

Gold in New York, 111⅞.

Legal Tenders in Portland—buying 89½; selling 90½.

Silver—Trade dollars, 90c; other coins, 95c.

The silver question is unchanged in its aspects in the local market, the discount remaining at 5 and 10 per cent on half dollars and trade dollars, respectively. There seems some difference of opinion as to the effect upon this branch of our currency of the passage of the silver bill now before Congress, but the most generally received impression is that the declaration of Congress making silver coin a legal tender, will have no more tendency to bring it up to a par with gold than the same law has upon the relative value of greenbacks. In short the government can inflate with silver just as well as with paper and the result of the measure now before Congress will be something of that nature.

The disposition manifest on the part of the banks and other lending institutions to call in their funds as the fall season approaches so that the expected increased demand may be readily met has resulted in the accumulation of a very considerable surplus of capital in the market now unemployed, quite enough to meet all the requirements of trade during autumn.

The general condition of ... merchandise ... The demand for ... agricultural implements and machinery is ... as brisk and extensive as in any former season, the volume of purchases showing an increase corresponding to the growth of the country and the addition to the farming population since last year. Dealers in these wares are making numerous sales, and the competition being greater than ever before in this market, purchasers have every favor extended to them, and importers are content to sell at moderate living profits. Groceries are still firm though buyers for cash or approved paper are able to secure some better bargains than are indicated by current quotations. Staple commodities in this line are in ample supply to meet the requirements of the trade, which just now is not active, buyers generally only making orders to fill up depleted stocks to bridge over until the harvest is gathered and the time for laying in full fall and winter stocks has arrived. Dry goods manifest but little or no improvement in prices, and the large trade sales recently made in San Francisco and the East indicate that the depressed condition of the market is likely to continue for some time to come.

The produce market shows about the same degree of activity as at our last review, the entire week having been rather dull than otherwise. There are no important changes in quotations to note to-day.
